Mr. Olyphant said the principal business o the Company is mining anthracite coal, and the quantity produced last year was about four million tons. A large portion of this came Kast to tidewater over the Erie road. Mr. Olyphant said he never had attended any of the monthly meetings of the salesagents at which prices were discussed, as well as the output. For the last forty years, he said, the price of coal was always lower from January to July than during the rest of e year. From July on to the beginning of the year prices always had an advancing ten-

Congressian stover eams in during the examination of Mr. Outphant, and the Committee consulted as to whether they should make the witness answer the questions but by Mr. Beach or not. He had refused to answer any further questions, inisiting over and over again that he had nothing to do with the combine or coal deal.

Mr. Olyphant finally said he would ask his sales agent to make any statement that the committee might want.

"Hon't you think that the coal companies and coal desiers of this city have been make excessive profits during the past year?" asked Mr. Beach.

"I think that the coal business is about as poor a business as a man could go into in this neighborhood," replied the witness. He was excused from further investigation.

Simith D. Mackey, a Jersey City retail dealer, was the next called. He said he bough his coal from the Pennsylvania Raifroad. At some seasons of the year he would be obliged to gay a collar more a ton than at others.

The prices were aiways higher in the Fall had to ctooper he paid do or 70 cents more a ton than he had paid in the Spring.

"Are the profits of the retail coal dealer excessive?" asked Lawyer Beach.

"They are not. At least, they were not last year. It was a hard season for every-body. Our profits were larger the year before."

"Let us hear something about the peace id harmony. That's what we're after," rethe scarcity of the commidity.

One of the main objects of the meetings, he said, was to discuss the probable demand, so that the companies could govern their output accordingly. None of the companies wanted to produce any more coal than it could dispose of, for it was a commodity that could stopes of, for it was a commodity that could not be stored easily and deteriorated when not immediately sold.
